WK1 - This lengthy report on the state of the legal profession documents the large debts and difficult job market today's law students are facing and the growing supply demand imbalance. According to the article, "Since 2008, some 15,000 attorney and legal-staff jobs at large firms have vanished, according to a Northwestern Law study. Associates have been laid off, partners nudged out the door and recruitment programs have been scaled back or eliminated." Meanwhile, "About 43,000 J.D.'s were handed out in 2009, 11 percent more than a decade earlier, and the number of law schools keeps rising -- nine new ones in the last 10 years, and five more seeking approval to open in the future."
